 In the bibliography of the works of G. Borrow these pamphlets are described in full, and the editor in his preface writes:—

Some account of the origin of these pamphlets, and some information regarding the material of which they are composed, may not be considered as inopportune or inappropriate.

As a writer of English Prose, Borrow long since achieved the position which was his due: as a writer of English Verse he has yet to come by his own.

The neglect from which Borrow's poetical compositions (by far the larger proportion of which are translations from the Danish and other tongues) have suffered has arisen from one cause, and from one cause alone—the fact that up to the present moment only his earliest and, in the majority of cases, his least successful efforts have been available to students of his work.

In 1826, when Borrow passed his ROMANTIC BALLADS through the Press, he had already acquired a working knowledge of numerous languages and dialects, but of his native tongue he had still to become a master. In 1826 his appreciation of the requirements of English Prosody was of a vague description, his sense of the rhythm of verse was crude, and the attention he paid to the exigencies of rhyme was inadequate. Hence the majority of his Ballads, beyond the fact that they were faithful reproductions of the originals from which they had been laboriously translated, were of no particular value.

But in 1854 Borrow made one more very serious effort to give his Ballads life. In that year he again took them in hand, subjected many of them to revision of the most drastic nature, and proceeded to prepare them finally for press. Advertisements which he drew up are still extant in his handwriting. But again fate was against him, and neither Kaempe Viser nor Songs of Europe ever saw the light.

After the death of Borrow his manuscripts passed into the possession of his step-daughter, Mrs. MacOubrey, from whom the greater part were purchased by Mr. Webber, a bookseller of Ipswich, who resold them to Dr. William Knapp. These Manuscripts are now in the hands of the Hispanic Society, of New York, and will doubtless remain for ever the property of the American people. Fortunately, when disposing of the bulk of her step-father's books and papers to Mr. Webber, Mrs. MacOubrey retained the Manuscripts of the Ballads, together with certain other documents of interest and importance. It was from these Manuscripts that I was afforded the opportunity of preparing the series of Pamphlets printed last year.

The Manuscripts themselves are of four descriptions. Firstly, the Manuscripts of certain of the new Ballads prepared for the Songs of Scandinavia in 1829, untouched, and as originally written; Secondly, other of these new Ballads, heavily corrected by Borrow in a later handwriting; Thirdly, fresh transcripts, with the revised texts, made in or about 1854, of Ballads written in 1829; and, lastly, some of the more important Ballads originally published in 1826, entirely re-written in 1854, and the text thoroughly revised.

As will be seen from a perusal of the pamphlets, the value as literature of Borrow's Ballads as we now know them is unmeasurably higher than that hitherto placed upon them by critics who had no material upon which to form their judgment beyond the ROMANTIC BALLADS, TARGUM, and THE TALISMAN, together with the sets of minor verses included in his other books. Borrow himself regarded his work in this field as superior to that of Lockhart, and, indeed, seems to have believed that one cause at least of his inability to obtain a hearing was Lockhart's jealousy for his own Spanish Ballads.

ROBERT BROWNING

AND

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

A highly interesting series of items personally connected with the lives of these two great Poets, being a portion of their Library removed from their last home in Florence, all of the books being presentation copies from celebrated contemporary authors, or volumes bearing the autograph signatures of one or other of the famous pair. In some cases there is considerable added interest on account of valuable marginal notes in their handwriting.

- 216 Byron. Poetry of. Chosen and arranged by MATTHEW ARNOLD.
12mo, original cloth. London, 1881. £14 14s

 Presentation copy from the Editor to ROBERT BROWNING, with inscription in Arnold's autograph:—

 Presentation copy to Robert Browning from the Author's nephew (who edited the work), with inscription on title-page.

225 Homerus. Odyssea, Graece.2 vols., 16mo, original calf. Oxonii, 1811. £18 18s* Elizabeth B. Browning's copy, with her autograph signature on the title-page of both volumes:—"Elizabeth B. Barrett."

An extremely valuable and interesting item from her library.

These volumes have a great number of markings in ink; and in the first volume the three blank pages at beginning are filled with minute notes in her autograph, both in Greek and English; and she makes some interesting and critical observations.

In the second volume there are some similar notes partially written on two pages.

On fly-leaves at end of both volumes she has made a summary of the lines and passages omitted in Payne Knight's edition, the markings previously referred to in the volumes being done for that purpose, and she makes a total of 1926 lines omitted in the Payne Knight's edition of the "Odyssey."

Only 25 copies issued, each numbered and signed by the Editor, Mr. Clement Shorter. The Browning Society was formed in 1881 by Dr. Furnivall and a few other enthusiasts in order to interpret the poetry of Robert Browning. The idea was suggested to the Poet, who at first treated the project as a joke. James Dyke Campbell was the second Secretary of the Society.

This Play was written at the request of Macready, who, at the supper to celebrate the success of TALFOURD'S ION on the 26th May, 1836, said:—

"Write a play, Browning, and keep me from going to America. What do you say to a drama on Strafford?"The play, however, was not completed for nearly another year. On 1 May, 1837, "Strafford" was published and produced at Covent Garden Theatre. It was played by Macready and Helen Faucit, but it only ran for five nights.

£2 2s

 A pamphlet written by the celebrated poet and novelist in support of Vizetelly, who had been imprisoned for publishing some of Zola's novels in English. This is A. C. Swinburne's Copy, who evidently has carefully perused it, and marked certain paragraphs in blue pencil. On one page Swinburne has written "Says The O'Buchanan."

Swinburne and Buchanan were great opponents. In 1866 the latter published a poem "The Session of the Poets," in which he wrote insolently of Swinburne, and in a pamphlet on Swinburne's Poems and Ballads W. M. Rossetti retorted by calling Buchanan "a poor but pretentious poetaster." In 1871 Buchanan retaliated with vehemence and wrote "The Fleshly School of Poetry." Swinburne with bitter causticity denounced Buchanan in Under the Microscope.

"Private Copy, Hall Caine," and inserted is a typewritten letter to J. S. Cotton with Hall Caine's autograph signature. The letter is headed "The Mahdi—the book and the copyright performance":—

"I give myself the pleasure of sending you a privately printed copy of my new story drama The Mahdi. On Tuesday morning a large edition of it as a story will be published in another form as the Christmas number of The Christian World. On Monday afternoon at three o'clock a copyright performance of it as a drama will be given at the Haymarket Theatre by the kind permission of Mr. Tree. . .

"P.S.—I don't intend to publish the Mahdi as a novel, so this little private edition is the only one likely to appear in the form of a book. If the verdict at the present moment is not unfavourable the drama will probably be produced in London early in the Spring."

 This celebrated work is a true narrative of the romantic adventures of an Ipswich girl, who in order to meet her lover in London, stole her master's horse, and, dressed as a sailor, rode from Ipswich to London. For the theft she was tried and sentenced to death, afterwards commuted to seven years' transportation. After the sentence she broke out of Ipswich Gaol and let herself down uninjured from the spikes on the top of its wall. She was soon recaptured and a second time sentenced to death, which was again commuted to transportation for life, and she was sent to Australia, and eventually obtained a remission of her sentence and married a respectable settler in that country.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK'S CLAIM TO BE THE ORIGINATOR OF CERTAIN OF THE NOVELS BY AINSWORTH AND DICKENS.

- 521 The Artist and the Author, a Statement of Facts by the Artist George Cruikshank, Proving that the Distinguished Author, Mr. W. Harrison Ainsworth, is "labouring under a singular delusion" with respect to the Origin of "The Miser's Daughter," "The Tower of London," etc.
 The FIRST EDITION. 16 pp., 8vo. Unbound as issued. 1872. £3 3s

 In this pamphlet Cruikshank not only lays claim to be the actual Originator of "Tower of London" and "Miser's Daughter," but also suggested to Ainsworth and drew up designs for "Old St. Paul's." In the pamphlet he further reiterates his former statement that Dickens' "Oliver Twist" was likewise his origination. G. C. writes. "The reason why I publicly claimed to be the originator of "Oliver Twist" was to defend Dr. K. Shelton Mackenzie, who was charged by Mr. John Forster, in his 'Life of Mr. Charles Dickens' with publishing a falsehood, whereas the Doctor was only repeating what I had told him. . . . I, being known generally only as an Artist, or illustrator, it would, therefore, very naturally be supposed that, in all cases, I have merely worked out other men's ideas. But, if I have the opportunity, I shall be able to show that other men have sometimes worked out my ideas. . . . And I will now explain that 'Oliver Twist,' 'The Tower of London,' 'The Miser's Daughter,' etc., were produced in an entirely different manner, from what would be considered as the usual course; for I, the Artist, suggested to the Authors of these works the original idea, or subject, for them to write out—furnishing, at the same time, the principal characters and the scenes," etc.

714 The Loving Ballad of Lord Bateman.

Illustrated by George Cruikshank.

FIRST EDITION. Square 12mo, original cloth with gilt design.

London, Charles Tilt, 1839.

£10 10s

* * * This very rare little book has 11 full-page etchings by George Cruikshank and a design in gold by him on cover.

There is some doubt of the Authorship of this humorous version of the Old Ballad of Lord Bateman. Mr. J. F. Dexter, the well-known Dickens' authority, states that Cruikshank on three occasions assured him that notes and preface were written by Dickens. G. A. Sala thought, however, that the phraseology of the verses clearly pointed to Thackeray's authorship, and the discovery of a Scrap Book containing "The Famous History of Lord Bateman," partly in print and partly in Thackeray's writing, and with coloured sketches by Thackeray, lends colour to the generally accepted opinion that the verses are by Thackeray and the notes and preface by Dickens.

These corrected proofs were presented to Col. Prideaux by Austin Dobson, and accompanying them is the Autograph Letter which was sent with the gift. In this the author says: "I am not sure I am not giving myself away in sending you these proofs, which shew how much useless work I do on these articles before I print them. But there, now they are yours, to keep or throw away as you please." Etc.

Inserted is a most interesting Autograph Manuscript by George Eliot, 2 pp., closely written on thin paper, dealing with the work. The first portion is evidently re-written by herself from an early criticism on the book, dated from Foleshill, Sept. 16, 1847, and finishes with remarks upon the publication of this, a "People's" edition, these later remarks are dated from "Priory, Regent's Park, May 16, 1870." She says: "Mr. Hennell ought to be one of the happiest of men that he has done such life's work. I am sure if I had written such a book I should be invulnerable to all the arrows of spitfire God and Goddesses. I should say, 'None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself seeing that I have delivered such a message for God and man.'" Etc., etc.

 This Collection is undoubtedly one of the finest which has ever been in the market. The subjects are her favourite ones of Children in their quaint out-of-door costumes and engaged in childish occupations. There are one or two which are evidently portraits, probably of her great friends the Evans children. Another most exquisite drawing is a highly finished water-colour of "Cinderella," with a long description below in Kate Greenaway's Autograph. Another is the Original design for the cover of the Almanac for 1893. Besides these Children Subjects, there are several exquisite drawings of Flowers, Fruit, etc., naturally all in Water Colours. Another very lovely drawing is that of a Child's Kite with long paper tail—the Kite is adorned with a Wind Mill and Flowers.

It is impossible to adequately describe all these charming drawings. In glancing through the two volumes, one will certainly agree with the critic (as if it were these drawings he was describing) when he stated that:—

"All who love children, all who love the fields and flowers and the brightness of healthy and sunny natures, must feel that Kate Greenaway had a claim on her country's regard and upon the love of a whole generation. She was the Baby's Friend, the Children's Champion, who stood absolutely alone in her relations to the public. She taught us more of the charm of their ways than we had seen before; she showed us their graces, their little foibles, their thousand little prettinesses, the sweet little characteristics and psychology of their tender age, as no one else had done it before."

 This strange book was printed after Hazlitt had discovered the true character of Miss Walker. De Quincey calls the book an "explosion of frenzy necessary to empty his overburdened spirit." Haydon the Artist writes as follows:—

"Hazlitt at present gives me great pain by the folly with which he is conducting himself. He has fallen in love to a pitch of insanity, with a lodging-house hussy, who will be his death. He has been to Scotland and divorced his wife, although he has a fine little boy by her: and after doing this, to marry this girl, he comes back and finds she has been making a fool of him in order to get presents, and in reality has been admitting a lover more favored. Hazlitt's torture is beyond expression: you may imagine it. The girl really excited in him a pure, devoted, and intense love. His imagination clothed her with that virtue which her affected modesty induced him to believe in, and he is really downright in love with an ideal perfection, which has no existence but in his own head! He talks of nothing else day and night. He has written down all the conversations without colour, literal as they happened: he has preserved all the love-letters, many of which are equal to anything of the sort, and really affecting: and I believe, in order to ease his soul of this burden, means, with certain arrangements, to publish it as a tale of character."

 A distinguished copy of a very beautiful edition. The introduction being almost entirely critical affords good scope for the addition of portraits: Pope, Byron, Boileau, Corneille, Chaucer, Dryden, Dr. Johnson, Mrs. Phillips, Ben Jonson, Thomson, and Chapman, have all excellent reasons for being represented by old engravings. Then distributed amongst the Poems are Portraits of Tom Keats (in colours after Severn), Fanny Brawne (full-length silhouette), Leigh, Hunt, Petrarch, Boccaccio, Edmund Spenser, &c., and, of course, there are different Portraits of the Poet himself. "The Eve of St. Agnes" has the complete series of 18 illustrations by C. O. Murray, and distributed appropriately throughout are engravings by Henry Moses after classical statuary by Anthony Canova. Some engravings of classical subjects are also introduced, and a few views connected with the poems, and the life of the Poet, whilst there is one which goes beyond: an etching of his grave by A. Evershed after Samuel Palmer.
